

homophones

Homophones are words that sound alike, but which are sometimes spelt differently and mean different things. Here are some examples:

The brake stops a car.

She wore a plain jumper.

Have you read this book?

A wound takes time to heal.

I can hear the doorbell.

Peace and quiet.

Buy some eggs, please.

People die in accidents.

Right is the opposite of left.

Do you know your times tables?

The wind blew.

Two ladies went to town.

Ben threw the ball to Bill.

The clock strikes every hour.

Three minus two is one.

Would you like some fruit?

The men dug a hole.

I have cereal for breakfast.

Which one is mine?

Break the chocolate in half.

The plane flew overhead.

The Swiss flag is red.

The heel is at the back of the foot.

She ran here and there.

Have a piece of fruit cake.

They sat by the stream.

Shall I dye my hair pink?

I must write a letter to my grandmother.

There were no tickets left.

The sky is blue.

Their children went too.

The car sped through the tunnel.

Our uncle is a deep-sea diver.

Who won the World Cup?

What is the sum of 19 and 281?

He ate a whole pizza.

What is your favourite serial on TV?

The witch made a vanishing spell.